The proliferation of electronic journals and full-text titles available through research databases has challenged and changed the ways in which libraries operate.

This workshop will provide opportunities to examine the ways in which Libraries are experimenting with changes in how they provide access to these resources, plan and budget to support subscriptions, and identify procedures and staffing needed to support the selection, acquisition, cataloging, and distribution of these materials.

In addition to presentations about new and existing library services and resources, this session will include a series of round table discussions. Workshop participants will have the opportunity to suggest topics for the round tables prior to the meeting. Opportunities to tour OCLC's facility will follow the workshop.
